They Meet Again

Just five years gone the Army rose and girded on its sword: The Navy ordered solid shot and Navy ships unmoored; And side by side they ventured forth as for a jubilee To grapple with an alien foe across the Northern Sen, I'ntil at last the fight was won, though deady was the fray-The Army and the Navy, they meet again today.

Again they meet; though martial drums are stilled throughout the land Once more upon the battlefield they make their gallant stand, And they who once fought side by side now fight as foe to foe, And some there are upon the field will taste of bitter woe Ere sets the sun upon the scene that greets the grim array-The Army and the Navy, they meet again today.

The slashing Army cohorts lunge deep for Navy gore. The Commodores fight mightily, the stands they rock and roar; Now Navy ranks draw close and tight, the Army holds its ground, A stirring, seething combat joined amid a gale of sound. They surge and thrust and counter-thrust and neither side gives way-The Army and the Navy, they meet again today.
